

Abstract

Title: A case of physiotherapeutic care of patient with juvenile idiopathic arthritis

Objectives: The major aim of this bacheor thesis is to highlight the role of physiotherapist in the diagnosis and therapy of juvenile idiopathic arthritis and to verify the effect of physiotherapeutic care chosen by the investigator in the therapy of the patient with this disease.

Methods: This bachelor thesis was made as a part of continuos professional practise in the Institut of Rheumatology in Prague, which was in the period from 7. 1. 2019 to 1. 2. 2019 led by the head of the physiotherapy department Eva Taušová. The thesis is divided into two main parts. The first part, the general part contains theoretical informations about disease called juvenile idiopathic arthritis, its characteristic, description of its clinical symptoms, its diagnostics and its treatment options. The second part, special part contains detailed case of physiotherapeutic care of the patient with juvenile idiopathic arthritis.

Results: A part of the special part is control kinesiological analysis, which demonstrates improvement in patient's clinical status.

Keywords: juvenile idiopathic arthritis, JIA, rheumatology, physiotherapy